I like Dragons

The flap of their wings as they take off

The whoosh of the flame that comes out of their mouth

The screech of the creature about to be sizzled

The roar of the dragon as its flame hits its target

The scratching of the rocks as it heads back to its lair

The tinkling of its treasure as it climbs on top of it to rest

The low rumbling of them sleeping

I like Dragons

I like Phoenixes

The flap of their wings

The swish of their tail

The sizzling of their fiery feathers

The screech as they burn to dust

The sweet song of re-birth

The squelch of eyelids opening for the first time

I like Phoenixes

I like Sea-Serpents

The slap of the waves against their huge bodies

The swish of their tails as they head through the seas

The glint in their eyes as they spy a large ship

The roar that they make as they move above the surface of the ocean

The screams of the fishermen as they spot the mighty beast

The crunch of the ship as it begins to be squeezed

The flap of the sails as the turbulent winds push them around

The final crack of the ship as it falls apart into the sea

I like Sea-Serpents
